SHANGHAI MAYOR'S COUNTER-DEMAND

CATASTROPHIC ERUPTION OF ACATENANGO.

THREE TOWNS DESTROYED.

OMINOUS LACK OF DETAIL.

New York, Jan. 22.

A terrible disaster has overtaken the little Central American republic of Guatemala, the scene of many great earthquake and volcanic catastrophes, according to a message from San Salvador, the adjacent republic.

At least three towns, Santa Lucia, Cotzumalhuapa and Antigua have been completely destroyed by the eruption of the volcano Acatenango.

A number of other towns are covered with dense clouds of smoke and falling ashes.

The fate of the town of Acatenango, 3,000 population, at the foot of the volcano is not known.

Antigua, which is 21 miles to the W.S.W. of Guatemala, the capital of the republic, was itself the capital until it was destroyed by an earthquake in 1773. It was then one of the most beautiful cities of America and had a population of about 60,000.

20,000 Population.

The new town which has arisen from the ashes, had a population of over 20,000. St. Lucia was also a large and thriving city.

There is a complete absence of further detail of the catastrophe, the number of casualties and so on.

SPAIN REVOLT ALARM.

CALCULATED
EXAGGERATIONS.

Madrid, Jan. 22.

Although effective steps have been taken to suppress the Communist rebellion in Catalonia, official quarters allege that the situation is serious, and that a general revolutionary movement has been fixed for Monday.

The official allegations, however, are not much credited.

The general opinion is that the Government is exaggerating the seriousness of the situation with a view to obtaining general support prior to action against the Church and the Jesuits.—Reuter.

TYPEWRITING ON THE 'PHONE.

NEW INVENTION FOR LONDON.

London, Jan. 22.

A remarkable new British invention, known as "The Teletypewriter Exchange Service," was described by the Postmaster-General, Sir Kingsley Wood, in a speech at Birmingham to-day.

He said that the new device would enable messages to be typewritten automatically between the offices of any two telephone subscribers who had teletypewriter machines installed.

The typist in one office would type a message and it would be printed simultaneously on both machines. It was hoped, he said, that the service would be available in London in the spring, and to subscribers in the provinces by the summer.—Reuter.

THE SITUATION RIPE FOR GREAT FLARE-UP.

ALL POLICE UNDER ORDERS FOR "ZERO HOUR" TO-DAY.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT). SHANGHAI, Jan. 23.

THE CHINESE REPLY to the ultimatum delivered by Admiral Shiosawa, commanding the Japanese Fleet, is being delayed until the return of Mr. Wu Tieh-chen, the Mayor of Greater Shanghai, from Nanking.

The Japanese are in a highly inflamed state of feeling and are holding mass meetings daily. One of the Japanese monks injured by the Chinese mob on Monday has since died, adding fuel to the flames.

The Japanese insist that the demands must be met and if not that drastic measures must be taken. They will not be content with half-way measures, and no equivocation of any kind in the answer of the Mayor will be tolerated.

An aeroplane-carrier, a cruiser and four destroyers to supplement the 400 men despatched from Kure are expected to reach Shanghai to-day.

The whole of the Settlement Police Force is under orders to stand by at two o'clock this afternoon, the hour of the burial of Mr. Matsujuro Yunase, the Japanese who was killed after the burning of the San Yu Towel Factory.

Japanese merchants have made huge donations to the expenses connected with the funeral which is certain to be a big affair attended by the Japanese community en masse.

Japanese military men are patrolling the Eastern District of the Settlement.

FOREIGN CONSULS IN CONFERENCE.

The foreign Consuls, Municipal officials and the commanders of the various military forces in the Settlement commenced a conference this morning.

Unless drastic precautions are adopted, it is feared that rioting on a much more serious scale will develop. The situation is ripe for a huge flare-up at any moment.

The Chinese threaten that unless the Japanese are suppressed, they will refuse to pay the Municipal taxes.

Mayor Wu Tieh-chen has sent a protest to Mr. Murai, the Japanese Consul-General, demanding an apology for Wednesday's riots, the arrest and punishment of those responsible, compensation for the Chinese killed and injured, and a guarantee that a similar incident will not occur.

S.M.C. IN A DILEMMA.

(Special to "Telegraph.")

Shanghai, Jan. 23.

Considerable apprehension exists here in view of the rising Sino-Japanese antagonism due to the clashes of the past three days.

The Settlement authorities are in a dilemma as to how to quieten the Chinese, who are seething with resentment against Japan, and the Japanese, who are intensely irritated by the huge losses suffered owing to the boycott, and the failure of the Council to suppress the anti-Japanese organisations.

To-day, the Japanese have ten warships and a thousand Marines at Shanghai and the Cabinet decision at Tokyo to "take the most appropriate measures suitable to the situation," have given rise to fears that the Japanese may attempt to usurp the authority of the Settlement.—Reuter.

Marbella Seizure Sequel.

Captain and Two of Crew Detained.

A vigorous probing of the alleged activities of the luxury schooner Marbella, as outlined in the Telegraph this week, is now occupying the attention of the Hongkong police authorities, and three members of the European crew, including the captain, have been detained.

So far no charge has been made against them, but they are being held on the grounds, amongst others, of being undesirable aliens.

A WORLD CURRENCY.

STERLING BASIS
SUGGESTED.

London, Jan. 22.

A step towards the establishment of a world currency was suggested by Sir Basil Blackett, the well-known finance and currency expert, in a speech at Brighton to-day.

He pointed out that sterling could form an international currency used by a considerable portion of the world, including the British Empire, the South American and Scandinavian countries, Portugal, Egypt, Japan, etc., in fact, all countries which had been forced off the gold standard.

If these countries could agree to co-operate in trying to maintain the stability of the purchasing power of their local currency and the stability of exchanges with each other based upon sterling, there would seem to be a possibility of setting the world the example of a currency system providing all the advantages of the gold standard.—Reuter.

FUGITIVE SAVES CONSTABLE.

TURNES BACK TO RESCUE.

LIGHT SENTENCE.

(Reuter's Special Service).

London, Jan. 22.

There was a most unusual incident in a West London Police Court to-day: the spectacle of the prosecuting counsel commending the prisoner.

It appears that the man in the dock was fleeing from the police, but returned in order to help an officer who was in grave danger.

Evidence was given to the effect that the prisoner was found lurking upon school premises. When a policeman surprised him, he fled across the roof.

The pursuing constable fell through and only saved himself by grasping a beam.

The prisoner returned and seized the policeman by the belt, supporting him until help came, and then continued his flight.

When he was arrested, he was found to be badly wounded in the hand.

In view of the circumstances, special leniency was shown to the prisoner, who had many previous convictions. He was sentenced to six weeks.

Ford Enters Baby Field.

A VEST-POCKET

Detroit, Jan. 22.

Mr. Henry Ford is entering the "baby car" market, according to a Michigan paper.

The report says that twelve Baby Fords have been secretly shipped to England.

They are under ten feet long, the bumper width is 55 inches and the height is fifty-three inches. The car has a four-cylinder engine, eleven inches long.—Reuter's American Service.

"No person shall import for sale or distribution in the Colony any shaving brushes manufactured in or exported from Japan, unless such shaving brushes are accompanied by a certificate, to the satisfaction of the Director of Medical and Sanitary Services, that the same are free from anthrax infection."

INDIAN PARLEY APPOINTMENTS.

TWO NAMES ADDED TO

London, Jan. 22.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan and Mr. Chintamani have been added to the Indian personnel of the Committee about to begin work in India in continuation of the discussions of the Round Table Conference.—British Wireless.

BRITISH TARIFF SPLIT.

SNOWDEN'S FOLLOWERS STUMBLING IN LOCK.

London, Jan. 22.
Mr. MacDonald's dramatic refusal to visit M. Laval, and Sir John Simon's cancellation of his trip to Geneva, together with the wholesale cancellation by Cabinet Ministers of social engagements, are held in political circles to be outward signs of acute Cabinet differences on fiscal policy.
Sir Herbert Samuel and Lord Snowden are credited with being the stumbling blocks in a comprehensive tariff programme, which is tentatively stated to comprise a general emergency tariff of 10 to 15 per cent, pending the formation of a commission to frame a higher scale for non-essential imports.
It is thought that free traders might be induced to accept the plan as a revenue tariff, but the Snowdenian school is credited with contending that the situation was recently profoundly altered by the suspension of the gold standard. Moreover, they oppose the adoption of an unalterable fiscal policy. Hence there is extraordinary interest in the Cabinet meeting which opened this morning, and is likely to prove one of the most critical in the lifetime of the present National Government, and test the diplomacy of Mr. MacDonald to keep team together.—Reuter.

No Unanimity.
Later.
On the termination of the prolonged Cabinet meeting, it was officially announced that it has been found impossible to reach a unanimous conclusion on the Fiscal Committee's recommendations.

The communiqué states that the Cabinet, however, is deeply impressed by the paramount importance at present of maintaining national unity, and accordingly determined that some modification of the usual Ministerial practice is required, and has decided that Ministers who are unable to agree with the majority of their colleagues on the subject of import duties and cognate matters be at liberty to express their views by speech and vote. Being essentially united on all other matters of policy, the Cabinet believes it is hereby best interpreting the will of the nation.—Reuter.

Timber Supplies.
London, Jan. 21.
Apropos the Canadian representations regarding the reported Russian timber contract concerning which Canada desired to ensure that the Canadian timber trade should not be interfered with by the possible imposition of a British protective tariff, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary for Colonies has replied to the Canadian High Commissioner that no British group had made representations for the protection of any timber contract which might be made with the Soviet.

The whole question is being carefully investigated, Mr. Thomas recalled a statement he made in the House of Commons, to which the Government still adhered, declaring that no commitments would be made which would hamper or prejudice the free and unfettered discussion of economic problems at the Ottawa Conference.—Reuter.

Import Duties.
London, Jan. 22.
The Ministry of Agriculture have issued an order imposing an import duty on tomatoes of two pence a pound, between June 1 and July 31, and a penny a pound between August 1 and October 31. The London Chamber of Commerce state that many inquiries from foreign manufacturers about factory sites in England continue to be received, and some 20 foreign firms have already decided to build here for the production of goods for the English market affected by the recently imposed customs duties.—British Wireless.

GIRL GUIDES SHORT OF OFFICERS.

ASSOCIATION NEEDS CANDIDATES.

An appeal for Guide Officers to help in the work of the Girl Guides' Association of Hongkong was made at the annual meeting of the Association, which was held at Government House on Thursday week, January 14, 1932, under the Chairmanship of the President, Lady Peel.
It was pointed out that lack of Officers had been the greatest handicap of the movement in the past, but an Officers' Training Company had now been started, and those interested were requested to write to the Honorary Secretary, Mrs. C. E. L. Grist, No. 524, The Peak, for full particulars.

The Attendance.
Those present included: Mrs. W. T. Southern (Colony Commissioner), Mrs. R. M. Dyer (Colony Treasurer), Mrs. W. J. Anderson (District Commissioner), Mrs. Alan Jones (Equipment Secretary), Mrs. C. E. L. Grist (Colony Secretary), Mrs. J. Owen Hughes, Mrs. R. H. Kotewall, Miss Woo, M.B.E., Mrs. K. Dunsterville, Mrs. E. R. Hallifax, Mrs. G. D. R. Black, Mrs. J. H. Taggart, Mrs. R. E. Lindzell, Miss Bruce, Mrs. E. P. Minett, Mrs. E. B. Reed, Mrs. W. B. A. Moore, Mrs. C. S. Mackie, Mrs. J. Dunby, Mrs. A. H. Walker, Mrs. K. M. Talati, Mrs. Gubbay, Mrs. J. H. Hunt.
Letters regretting absence were received from Mrs. E. D. C. Wolfe, M.B.E., Lady Ho Tung, Mrs. H. T. Cressy, M.B.E., Madame Yoshida, Miss Cooper, Mrs. D. W. Tratman, Miss Sawyer, Mrs. A. R. H. Phillips, The Superlous Italian Convent.

Guide Trainer.
After the adoption of the annual report and balance sheet, Mrs. Southern stated that there were two items which did not appear in the report. One was that a Guide trainer, Miss Rachael Warren, from Home, was expected here on 11th February. In a small place like Hongkong it was of great advantage to the Movement to have fresh ideas and constructive criticism.

Secondly, the Guides had had the good fortune to obtain permission, through General Sandilands, to build a Guide Headquarters on a beautiful site on the way to Flagstaff House. General Sandilands had been a marvellous friend to the movement, and the Guides could not sufficiently express their gratitude to him. The Guides and Brownies needed a meeting place where links of friendship could be strengthened, where cooking tests and other practical work could be carried out, and a place where they could keep their stores. This had been put within their reach by General Sandilands.

New Hut Donated.
In addition, owing to the kind interest of Mrs. Kotewall (one of the Vice-Presidents) and the great generosity of Mr. Tang Shu-kin, who was the champion and supporter of all good causes in the Colony, a sum of $1,000 towards the cost of the hut had been promised. Mr. Tang handed the list with a donation of $500 and had offered to raise the remainder. It was hoped to begin building soon. Colonel Skinner, to whom many thanks were due, had already drawn up a plan. It was hoped that other Vice-Presidents, and all the Guide Companies and Packs would give a helping hand. It would be necessary to furnish the hut and equip it so that, while not going in for anything extravagant, it would prove a pleasant meeting place for all Guides and Guide friends.

Thanks Expressed.
Mrs. Southern expressed the sincere thanks of the Guide Association to Lady Peel, for permitting the meeting to be held at Government House, and also for many other kindnesses to Guides during the past year. Many thanks were also due to those who had served on Headquarters Com-

Gems of Peril

HAZEL CROSS HALEY

BEGIN HERE TO-DAY.

Mary Harkness plots to ensure the fly, who she believes "framed" her brother, Eddie, with the murder of her father, and to see him killed down and killed him. She is aided by Bruce, who is a detective, and by a woman friend and is ordered out by his father, who makes Mary his heir. Bruce vows to root Mary, who he thinks is a gold-digger. Dick forbids Mary to see Bruce or continue the investigation. She goes to Miami on the Jupiter yacht, hoping The Fly will be at Miami to see his horse run.

CHAPTER XXXVII

Mary laid a light veil over her shoulders and stepped into the hall as soon as she heard Bates' door close. He stood resplendent in evening dress, clanking at his collar, an improved but still a brightly sunburnt young man.

"All set?" Mary replied.
"Lord," he groaned. "I thought this job was a cinch when I took it. Yacht, parties—what phooey!" He lifted his chin as far as possible out of his unrelenting collar, settled it back again and said resignedly, "Well, let's go." He hummed lugubriously a bar or two of the "Dead March."

A trace of the old Mary was in the giggle this provoked from her. "It will be cooler on the roof," she comforted him. She had grown rather fond of the little chap in recent days; how competent he was as a detective she did not know, but he was doggedly willing and a cheerful soul, and did not mind anything for Mary felt as if she were her. She thought of the money Mr. Jupiter had given her and decided suddenly what to do with it.

"She put it in his surprised hand and clenched the fingers on it."

"No!" he boomed loudly, agitated. But she made him take it.

"For being a good egg," she said. "How did you come out with your puzzle?"

"Oh, that." He seemed relieved to change the subject. "I didn't get much done on that. Took all my time getting into this boiled shirt. Maybe I ought to stay down and work on that." He asked hopefully. "I could, if you weren't sporting that necklace around so free."

"You come along, let the picture puzzle go for the present. More than likely it's just some political candidate he took a dislike to. Even criminals have their politics, I suppose."

Bates rapped on Mr. Jupiter's door, evening the necklace meanwhile. "Phew!" he remarked. "Some class, eh? There's going to be several hundred mighty jealous wrens at that party when they glimpse that, believe me."

"Come in," yelled Mr. Jupiter in a voice that made them both start.

As soon as they entered, they realized that he was very angry. Bruce was there, leaning against a chair, examining the tip of his cigarette with half-closed eyes. Jupiter nodded toward chairs, then turned back to Bruce.

"Go on! Say what you've got to say," he commanded roughly. Mary's heart sank—a quarrel with Bruce at this particular moment? If only the old man would soften his attitude toward his son a little, she thought Bruce might be won to his father's views much more easily.

But Bruce's manner hardened to meet his father's.

"Let me get this straight," Bruce frowned. "I'm to understand that you suspect De Loma of being the man you're after?"

Jupiter, senior, nodded. "Good Lord!" Bruce burst out. "I despise the chap, certainly, but—do you realize the absurdity of that? Why, he's an old friend of Louise's! She's known him for years, and whatever else he may be surely it's nonsense to try to make him out a murderer, a—thief!"

When no one spoke, he continued in a tone that struggled to keep reasonable, but great was the may not be precisely a lily, by the strict American code of morals, ethics and whatnot. He's nobility, you know. And post-war conditions—I don't say he may not have turned his hand to a shady deal or two, to keep from starving."

Mary had an impression that he was talking to bolster up his own courage, that behind this scornful front he was frightened. The spectacle of his Louise in the arms of a man of that stripe was horrible to him. Against his judgment he must believe the best of the man or see Louise as horribly smudged by her former association with him.

"To keep from working, you mean," Bates interjected disgustedly.

Before Bruce could reply, Mary checked him with another question. "You haven't told Louise what we know about De Loma, have you?"

Bruce regarded her steadily. "Not yet," he said deliberately. "Look here, father, perhaps I can't alter your ideas about this man just yet, but I can alter them about someone else. I imagine. I happen to have certain facts that—well, that—"

"Out with 'em!" the old man snapped. "No hemming and hawing. We're in a hurry." He looked at his watch. "It's seven o'clock now."

"I'll be brief," Bruce sneered. "It's this: I think all this pursuit of De Loma is simply a fake on Miss Harkness' part. He is the first man who came to hand. There, for she points him out as the murderer. Where is the real murderer? I fancy the authorities know best about that. Why, this girl is working you for all she can get out of you, can't you see it?"

Bates moved forward threateningly, but Mr. Jupiter held up a restraining hand.

"So far I've submitted with fairly good grace to all this hocus-focus, but I ask you—isn't it odd that the pursuit of this—phantom, let us say—should take on the general lines of a pleasure jaunt of the first order? A long yacht cruise—a look-in at the race-tracks—a life of considerable charm in this rather attractive resort—Bermuda in the offing, and—" Bruce indicated the blanched girl with an impatient gesture, "my mother's jewels flaunted all over the place!" He stopped, got hold of himself, spoke in a quieter voice, like a lawyer ending his diatribe. "Now, I submit, father—"

"You submit what?" his father prompted, in a level voice.

"Why, that you'd do better to get rid of this woman and forget the other thing. She's broken with her fiancé. For what? Because she's after bigger game. You! She's carried me along very graciously because she can't get rid of me. Why? Mary felt as if the scorn in his eyes would wither her where she stood, "right under your nose she's grabbing right and left whatever she can get her hands on—right now she's got a diamond bracelet of Louise's salted away! How's that for cuteness? De Loma loaned it to Louise, and she got it away from all of us. Why, she's slicker than De Loma dares to be!"

There was a long minute or two of ghastly silence, broken by Bates' heartfelt exclamation. "Well, I'll be damned!" He laughed then—positively roared.

Mr. Jupiter, quirked an eyebrow, looked as if he would have smiled, too, if he had not felt so heartless at this tirade of his son's. Mary stumbled to a window and looked out. Father and son faced each other.

"Let him do just this, if he will," she soothed. Ask him to keep Louise away from the hotel for this evening to avoid any further scenes. Keep her where she won't see or speak to De Loma, until we've done what we planned to do to-night. If De Loma learns we have the bracelet, it may be dangerous, you see—"

For Bruce's benefit, "I imagine you won't want to have dinner with us now and I'm sure she won't."

"You imagine correctly. Nothing would give us greater pleasure than to offer you our regrets." With that Bruce went out.

Mary turned impulsively to the old man, her heart wrung by the forlorn expression on his face.

exercise the greatest care in the choice of baby's food. So much in later years depends on the foundation laid in infancy. With the mother lies a big responsibility, the welfare of the coming generation. The tropics especially call for a healthy constitution. For baby, therefore, the best only is good enough. This is the reason why you should give baby plenty of "BEAR BRAND" MILK. It does more than merely nourish, it builds up the whole system, it paves the way to perfect health and success in life. BEAR BRAND comes from the great Swiss Milk Centre, the Emmenthal, it is very rich in nutritive elements, absolutely pure and an infant food par excellence. BEAR BRAND MILK goes to make healthy babies, happy children, successful men and women.

FIRE IN MEDICINE SHOP.

LAKH'S WORTH STOCK INVOLVED.

An inquiry into the origin and cause of a disastrous fire which broke out at 134, Bonham Strand during the early hours of January 12 last was conducted by Mr. Schofield at the Central Police Court yesterday afternoon. A jury was not required.

Inspector E. Bloor conducted the proceedings on behalf of the Police, while Mr. R. A. Wadeson held a watching brief on behalf of the insurance companies affected.

Mr. H. T. Brooks (Superintendent of the Fire Brigade) was the first witness called. He said that at about 3.40 a.m. on January 12 the Central Fire Station received two calls from street alarms in Winglok Street and Bonham Strand. In the ordinary course when one call was received, three engines, two from Central and one from the station nearest the scene of the fire, would be despatched, but on this occasion when two calls were received four engines were sent out without the officers knowing the nature of the outbreak.

Sub Officers J. W. Woolford and A. J. Cash were in charge of two of the engines, but a Chinese sub-officer was in charge of the first appliance to arrive on the scene. About three minutes after the calls were received, the "home message" was sent to the Central Station. On receipt of the last call witness himself went to the scene, after ordering the first float and two other officers to proceed there.

Floors Collapse.

Continuing witness said that he arrived about four minutes after the first appliance. On his arrival he found 134, Bonham Strand well alight, the three upper floors particularly. Witness then sent out the "district call," summoning to the scene all appliances on the Hongkong side.

Witness said that when he arrived, the appliances were already working three jets from the streets and one from the house opposite, with others being put into commission. Altogether seven jets were brought into play. Shortly after his arrival the first floor collapsed, followed five minutes later by the second and third floors.

The fire was extinguished at 5.15 a.m. Later witness looked over the ruins in an endeavour to discover the cause of the outbreak, but it was too difficult to form any opinion because of the large amount of debris that was piled up on the ground floor.

Cause of Fire.

On Thursday last, witness again visited the ruins with a view to ascertaining the origin of the fire if possible, but could form no opinion although it appeared that the outbreak started in the rear of either the ground or first floors.

Witness said that the fact the fire was so well alight when the brigade arrived made it appear that it was allowed to burn for some little time before the calls were sent.

The Chinese sub-officer, who was first on the scene, said that he arrived about two minutes after receiving the calls. When he arrived, there was nobody in the house.

Yim Sui-wah, one of the partners of the Pak Sang Hong, medicine shop of 134, Bonham Strand, said that the business occupied the ground floor and the top floor. He had been in business in Canton and Hongkong for the past 28 or 29 years, in Canton for 16 years.

Stock Worth $100,000.

Witness mentioned that he had nearly $100,000 worth of stock, some $70,000 of which was kept in the shop while the remainder was stored on the top floor. One of the safes contained $1,200, consisting mostly of notes.

His business was in a prosperous state, having made a profit year by year ever since it started. Last year's earnings amounted to several thousands of dollars.

On the night in question he had stayed after closing-up hours, chatting with a friend, and returned to his home at Third Street round about midnight. About 3 a.m. a foki informed him over the telephone that the shop was on fire. He immediately took a ricksha and went there.

He had no idea how the fire started—he was not there. Occasionally he had dried medicine on the premises, but had not done so for the ten days prior to the outbreak. Replying to Mr. Wadeson, witness said that his two partners were not in the Colony, one having gone to Singapore as a travelling trader and the other to Australia. He had not submitted accounts to them, nor remitted their share of the profits.

Horn as Medicine.

Taken over a variety of valuable stock, witness said he needed pearls and powdered pearl accounted for nearly $20,000 of the total amount, his ginseng for $10,000, his deer horn for $2,000, and his chamomile horn for $16,000, or $17,000. Other items were not fairly inflammable,

CINEMA SCREENINGS.

NOTES SUPPLIED BY THE THEATRES.

Norma Shearer, in a gripping drama of San Francisco's gambling life, is the attraction coming to-morrow to the Queen's Theatre, when "A Free Soul," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sensational filmization of the Adela Rogers St. Johns novel, will be seen.

Miss Shearer plays another such glamorous role as she gave to the screen in "The Divorcee" and "Strangers May Kiss," but this time in a setting of stark drama—of adventure in the underworld, among gangsters and gamblers, as a contrast to life in the homes of wealthy society leaders and descendants of the millionaire Argonauts.

She plays the role of the daughter of a famous lawyer, immersed in his sophisticated teachings of freedom in life, and torn between two loves—one for a wealthy society man, the other for a gambler and underworld czar. Lionel Barrymore returns to acting to portray the lawyer father, one of the most dramatic roles in modern literature. Leading the girl into error, awakening to his mistake, and finally bearing his own sins before a jury to save the happiness of his daughter, he presents a dominant and unforgettable figure.

Leslie Howard and Clark Gable share leading man honours, Howard, last seen in "Five and Ten," appearing as the society sportsman, and Gable, who scored in "Dance, Fool, Dance," and "The Secret Six," playing the role of the polished gambler. The comic James Gleason and Lucy Beaumont also have important roles.

The picture was directed by Clarence Brown who produced "Anna Christie," "Romance," and "Inspiration."

"Five and Ten."

Twenty-two different settings were built by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer architects for "Five and Ten" in which Marion Davies is to be seen at the Queen's Theatre.

Because of the swift and ever-changing action in the new film, the unusual number of sets was demanded, some of them requiring more area and materials than sets for many entire productions of recent months. One set, representing the New York home of the newly-rich Ravick family, occupied nearly ten thousand square feet of stage space and required more than three hundred incandescent lights, including a huge battery of giant sun arcs.

The library and hall portions of these sets were built to the maximum width that could be covered in the spread of a motion picture camera lens without losing the identity of the players in the action, the purpose being to dwarf the figures amid a monstrous display of wealth. Several thousand books had to be rented to fill the massive book shelves in the library and a painting ten by eighteen feet of Napoleon secured to hang over the imposing fireplace.

Included in the wide variety of settings that were built for the picture directed by Robert Z. Leonard were a conservatory, modernistic business offices, the roof of a new skyscraper, elevator shafts, a charity bazaar, society ballroom, wedding chapel, steamer deck, wharves, stores, bachelor apartments, dressing rooms and numerous bedrooms and hallways.

These lavish settings were all designed and built under direction of Cedric Gibbons, studio art director. Costumes, too, had to be especially created and executed for the feminine players by Gilbert Adrian, who incorporated in his original designs many novel features.

The new style creations are worn in the picture by Miss Davies, Irene Rich, Mary Duncan, Lee Remick and Ruth Selwyn, some forty-eight different gowns in all.

Leslie Howard plays opposite Miss Davies in her new starring vehicle and the supporting cast includes Richard Bennett, Kent Douglas, Arthur Housman, George Irving, Hal-Isell Hobbes, Charles Giblyn and Henry Armetta.

"Lascen of the Rio Grande." Universal's straight-shooting, Spaniard-favoured romance of the Mexican border, which will be the next attraction at the Central, with Leo Carrillo, John Mack Brown, Dorothy Burgess and Slim Summerville in its principal roles.

Based upon the Frank Despres poem, "Lascen," the story concerns a dark-eyed son of the dance-halls, a tenderly murderous half-breed cattle owner who like his women beautiful, and a handsome Texas Ranger in love.

The picture is packed to the brim with hard-riding, howling guns, thrilling, Spanish melodies, and romantic scenes, and is a photographic classic, according to reports. There is a thrilling cattle stampede, a rousing gun-fight between the half-breed's non-too-careful sharpshooters and the Rangers, and some of the scene's choicest comedy, furnished by Slim Summerville and Frank Campeau.

Leo Carrillo, suave star of the stage and screen, appears an ideal Jose Santa Cruz, Lascen's half Portuguese, Half Indian admirer, and Dorothy Burgess, sensation of "In Old Arizona" and a host of hits, is Lascen. The erstwhile All-American football star and featured player of "Coquette," "Billy the Kid," "Montana Moon" and "Our Dancing Daughters," John Mack Brown, is seen as the strapping Texas Ranger.

Edward Laemmle, well known director of "Cheating Cheaters," "The Drake Case" and a long list of successes, directed "Lascen of the Rio Grande" and is recognized for his expertness in filming the outdoor action pictures.

Tom Reed wrote the screen story; Randall Faye, the adaptation; Earl Laemmle, Jr., Universal production chief, supervised the making of the film with Sam Bischoff as assistant producer.

"Hush Money."

"Hush Money," Fox film which is now showing at the King's Theatre, is a mighty fine piece of entertainment. Its central figure is a gang of what might be called high grade racketeers, immaculately clad gentry who frequent the opera, the exclusive night clubs, the fashionable hotels of Park Avenue, have plenty of money and are apparently without visible means of support.

Owen Moore is the chief racketeer, debonair, suave, seemingly cultured, and thus it is easy for him to induce Joan Bennett, a beautiful girl down on her luck, to accept his patronage. Later, she finds, to her dismay, his true calling and she can do nothing except become one of the gang and pose as the wife of Moore who uses her as a bait to become acquainted with wealthy visitors to New York City.

Eventually, through a slight slip up, the gang is rounded up and sent for intermittent terms up the state. Released from prison she determines to go straight and meets Hardie Albright, with whom she falls in love. They are married, she becomes the mother of a boy but the spectre of the past arises and Moore, released from prison, who attempts to black-mail her. At this point the detective enters again into the scene and he straightens out her problem but at a terrific cost as the story reveals.

Joan Bennett does fine work as Janet Gordon and reveals a new side of her versatility as an emotional actress. Albright is especially good and fine work is also done by Moore as the blackmailer and Douglas Congrovo as the detective. Myrna Loy, C. Henry Gordon, Hughie White, George Raft, and an adorable child actor, Ronald Cobby. Sidney Landfield's direction is more than satisfactory.

"Bad Girl" To-morrow.

A preview of "Bad Girl," due at the King's Theatre to-morrow, shows it as one of the few Hollywood human interest productions in which the sob stuff is not played with the fastidious pedal hard down. There is something so unorthodox in this very ordinary tale of two very ordinary people, that it comes as a refreshing change after the recent welter of extravaganzas, gangster films and romantic farces. There are only three principals in the cast of "Bad Girl," and two of them make their debut in talking pictures in it. James Dunn proves to be a fresh faced youngster with an engaging smile and a rasping twang, and both Sally Eilers and Mina Combell cannot be alleged to have the cultured English voice that is so sought after these days, but the voices harmonize with the plot and the settings; that is probably one of the reasons why "Bad Girl" stands out as a human story of note and not just an ordinary production.

JAPAN BECOMING IMPATIENT.

It would appear, from the grave developments in Shanghai, that Japan's patience, in the face of continued anti-Japanese excesses in that city and elsewhere, is becoming exhausted. That is how we interpret the ultimatum which demands, amongst other things, the dissolution of organisations which have been directing the anti-Japanese movement and at the same time inflaming public opinion. So far there is no indication of the "drastic measures" which the Japanese admiral threatens, except that they will be for the purpose of protecting Japanese rights and interests. But whatever their nature, they amount to an intimation to the Chinese authorities that if the latter are unable to guarantee protection, then Japan herself will be compelled to intervene and assume the task.

Foreign reaction to these developments will, we imagine, be varied. Recalling the troublous day of 1925, it is well to remember that on more than one occasion the Powers were compelled to warn China on somewhat similar lines. It was not then, any more than it is to-day, a mere question of persistence by the Chinese people, on patriotic grounds, in an economic boycott. Such tactics can be defended, so long as the rightful interests of the boycotted country are not infringed. Japan's complaint is that the anti-Japanese activity has been in many cases under the direct or indirect guidance and encouragement of the Chinese Government. That cannot be questioned. The case can, indeed, be taken further by showing that not only have Chinese authorities fostered and encouraged the movement, but they have permitted the anti-Japanese organisations to over-ride their own powers and functions. There is the additional point that, once these movements are started, they get completely out of hand and inevitably lead to clashes between Chinese and Japanese, creating a situation in which the lives of perfectly innocent people are placed in jeopardy. There have been many instances in Shanghai in which even Japanese children have been subjected to mob assaults, whilst for many weeks past it has been deemed advisable for marines to escort Japanese children to and from school. The latest incident, a brutal attack on Japanese priests, is a further indication of the forces which are let loose once mob feeling are let loose once

These are aspects of the situation which must be borne in mind, and Japan is quite right in constraining these outrages with the protection accorded to Chinese nationals in Japan. On the other hand, Japan must realise that the feeling of which these incidents are an extreme expression is a direct outcome of her own wrongful policy in Manchuria. It could not be expected that China, or any other self-respecting nation, should remain quiescent in the face of forcible occupation of her territory; and due allowance must be made for genuinely spontaneous patriotic feeling. None the less, there can be no defence of the extreme limits to which a very natural movement has gone.

The original source of all these troubles, of course, is Japan's action in Manchuria. It would be shutting our eyes to the facts to say that Japan has no grievances in that region; she has. But she must certainly have no right to take the law into her own hands, as she has done, in breach of her pledged word. Continuing the same line of thought, it must be said that the Chinese people have a perfect right to apply an economic boycott against Japan, especially in view of the lack of other means by which they can express their feelings, but they are not entitled to overstep the bounds and indulge in terrorism and other illegal activities. It is well, in assessing the situation, that we should not confuse the issues. On the general aspects of the position, China has a good case, but she is certainly not improving it by resorting to methods against which Japan is quite right in protesting.

The Tariff Battle.

The National Cabinet's solidarity may be shattered against the tariff wall. Differences have exhibited themselves both among the members of the special committee appointed to provide their colleagues with a comprehensive plan and in the Cabinet as a whole. The members sat for nearly five hours on Thursday without achieving agreement in any sense and again yesterday with the same result. Attempts have been made to minimise the seriousness of the battle which is being waged between those who would take the bull by the horns and those who walk only with reluctance in the paths of trade disturbance. It is obvious, however, that the differences are persistent and on issues much more important than mere matters of detail. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has been obliged to decline M. Laval's invitation to Paris owing to the vital nature of the discussions. The Prime Minister would have jumped at the offer had he dared. It was a chance which would not have been allowed to slip had there been the barest possibility of a spirit of compromise in London. Likewise, Sir John Simon, having arranged on Wednesday to leave for Geneva on Saturday, is forced on Thursday, after the Cabinet meeting, to request Lord Cecil to represent Great Britain at the League Council meeting. Clearly the Cabinet is meeting with serious difficulties in finding an agreed policy. The wonder is that the strain of welding the diversified outlooks of the members of the Cabinet into a common policy has not manifested itself more markedly before. The apparent unanimity upon the remarkable agricultural dumping duties, compliance with some of Mr. Runciman's decrees, have caused surprise in circles who thought themselves well versed in the mentality of the leading members of the Cabinet, who thought they knew exactly how far they were prepared to go and how soon they would call a halt to trade interference. The explanation is probably that these particular members pacified their consciences with the thought that they were approving emergency measures. Free to face with a programme involving a general tariff, they are baulking. But, much as we disapprove of the erection of further trade barriers, a break-up of the Cabinet on this issue would be calamitous to-day. If a fight there must be, let the gauntlet be held until Britain can see her way clearly through the mists of the world crisis.

The P. & O. s.s. Corfu from Hongkong arrived at London on the 21st January at 1 p.m.

His Excellency the Governor has appointed Mr. J. H. B. Lee to be Assistant Postmaster General.

Commissioned Shipwright H. L. Metters has been appointed to the Hongkong Royal Naval Dockyard.

The Colonial Secretary announces that quarantine restrictions have been imposed against arrivals from Pakhol on account of smallpox.

The Hon. Mr. T. N. Chau is to distribute the prizes of the Government Vernacular Middle School in the school hall on Tuesday, January 26, at 11 a.m.

The next meeting of the Hongkong Rotary Club will be a closed one, open only to members and visiting Rotarians. Members will be invited to discuss Club welfare again.

His Excellency the Governor has accepted the resignation by Captain T. A. Martin, of his Commission in the Reserve of Officers of the Hongkong Volunteer Defence Corps.

The First Speech Day of Hwa Nan College will be held in the Ho Shing Theatre on Saturday, January 30, at 3 p.m. Professor R. K. M. Simpson has kindly consented to distribute the prizes.

It is notified that at the expiration of three months the Liang Kwong Motor Bus Co., Ltd. and the Kwong Hing Co., Ltd., unless cause is shown to the contrary, be struck off the register and the companies will be dissolved.

Mrs. S. W. Tso, the wife of the Hon. Mr. Tso, has kindly consented to present the certificates at the Annual Speech Day of the Fairless School which will be held in the St. Stephen's Girls' College Hall on Tuesday, February 2, at 3 p.m.

Members of the Red Club enjoyed a successful subscription dance at Lane, Crawford's Restaurant last night, there being a good attendance and a varied programme of dances. In addition the dancers indulged in the Eightsome Reel, Caledonian, a Four-some and the "Quaint White Sorcerer". Mr. T. P. Sanderson was M.C., and the music was supplied by the Restaurant orchestra.

On Monday afternoon at 5.30 Dr. Saur de Waldemar, "Master Magician and Telepathist," whose recent display of his talent at the Peninsula Hotel was greatly enjoyed, will give an entertainment at the Club de Recreio. The price of admission is $1.00, children being admitted at half-price. This will be the last opportunity of seeing the famous magician at work in the Colony as he is leaving shortly for Manila.

An aged hawkler charged with lacking a licence, told Mr. Williams at the Central Magistracy this morning when questioned as to the number of years he had been in Hongkong, that he could still recollect being present at the landing of the late Sir Henry Molyneux when he returned to the Colony as Governor. The defendant's case having been found to be a deserving one, the Magistrate allowed him a grant of three dollars from the Poor Box funds towards the cost of a licence.

THE PRINCE'S ENGLISH.

Our language is constantly changing
The study of the King's English
As contrasted with the Prince's English
Is very illuminating.

By F. G.
BLANDFORD.

WHICH DO YOU SAY?

The first of these is the vowel sound in the stressed syllable of office, officer, coffee, cough, trough, salt, gone, lost, cross, off, often, soft, etcetera. In the "Queen's English," which was no idle phrase—for Queen Victoria offered to her subjects one of the best examples of beautiful diction in the type of pronunciation that was the fashion of her time—the principal vowel in all of these words was an exact rhyme with the vowel in the modern pronunciation of law. Nowadays—who can say? Do we make them all rhyme exactly with the vowel in hot? Officer, office, coffee, cough, trough—yes, probably. Salt? Do you say salt or sawlt, or neither? Gon or gawn, or something in between? Lost or lawst? Cross is now supposed to be less "vulgar" of "Cockney" than crawse.

English pronunciation is in a state of transition. This may appear to some to be a profound observation; as a matter of fact, it is the baldest possible truism. Every living spoken language at every period of its existence is in a state of transition, and at every age elderly people may be found who inveigh against the barbarisms and neologisms of the rising generation. We tolerate every change in the language up to the time of our grandfathers, and after that we yield to pressure without knowing it.

WE BECOME "QUAINT."

The child is very definitely the father of the man in matters of speech. After middle age we yield less, and "write to the papers" more, but we do not stem the tide of change. Our own speech becomes definitely "quaint" or old-fashioned, and our grand-children pity us or despise us or respect us according to their temperaments or according to ours.

Most people who write, usually indignantly, on matters of pronunciation, ignore altogether the time element in the variations of language. They regard all variations from their own pronunciation as being due to difference of local dialect or of social dialect, and overlook the fact that in every locality and in every class the speech of the younger generation is steadily establishing itself in place of the pronunciations of their parents.

It is difficult, without having recourse to a system of symbols to represent each sound, to show exactly how these changes are gradually taking place, but there are at least two groups of words in which the old, the new and the transitional pronunciations can be heard by any accurate observer at the present time.

But is there no alternative between these two extremes? A speaker of 90 or a speaker of 19 might see none. The great majority, however, of cultured English speakers between 40 and extreme old age use neither of these vowels. In their pronunciation of the word "off" usually contains a vowel different from on, and in "He got off awfully cheaply," off certainly has not the same vowel as awfully. There is, therefore, an intermediate vowel between o and aw which can be heard in the pronunciation of this group of words by most middle-aged speakers.

Another group of words in which transitional vowels may be heard is in common words of Romance origin in which A in the spelling is followed by a nasal and another consonant—words like France, dance, advantage, plant, command, commandment, etc., and some others that do not fall exactly into this category, such as photograph, graph, elastic, etc. It is commonly supposed that the pronunciation of such words with the a as in hat is a Northern pronunciation. It is so only in the sense that that pronunciation is dying harder in the North than in the South of England. Here we must have recourse to a symbol to indicate the possible variants: The recognised symbol for "the short a"—it is actually no shorter than any other, but of a different quality—is the symbol used for this sound in old English, æ. For the "back" a, as in father, we will use the spelling ah. The ordinary roman "a" may be taken to represent the vowel sound heard in a "broad" Lancashire or Yorkshire pronunciation of man, which does not exist in Southern English excepting in this group of words.

SAY "FRANCE"!

In the Queen's English these words were generally pronounced France, dance, advantage, plant, command, etc., and now most young people in the South of England, to the great annoyance of the North and of many Americans and others, say Franche, dahnse, pahnt, commahndment, etc. But listen closely to the middle-aged and cultured speaker. His France is neither Franche or Franche. Commandment has exactly that intermediate vowel between command and command that satisfies the ear of his grandfather and his grandson that he is speaking just like each of them.

When Queen Victoria died the "Queen's English" became automatically the "King's English." The phrase then had less meaning. Now it means as much as the old phrase did, but we who are middle-aged must not overlook the fact that while we speak the King's English ourselves, there is also very clearly a Prince of Wales's English that has every right to our local consideration. A comparative study of the two is very illuminating.

The Licensing Board meets on February 3rd, at 8 p.m., when the following applications will be considered:—Ho Sit-yue, restaurant keeper's adjunct licence, Prince's Cafe; Raku Akiyoshi, hotel keeper's adjunct licence, Fukusumi Hotel; Yae Miyajima, hotel keeper's adjunct licence, Suyohiro; Lam Kan-wan, restaurant keeper's adjunct licence, Hennessy Cafe; David Gahruier, restaurant keeper's adjunct licence, David's Cafeteria.

FACTS Concerning the World's Best Tonic Food Beverage

YOUR health is too important for you to take risks by drinking any haphazard mixture of food ingredients. You want a food beverage which you can rely upon to give health and strength.

A perfect food beverage must contain certain essential food elements—proteins, fats, carbohydrates, mineral salts and vitamins. Scientists claim that these vital elements are contained most abundantly in malt, milk and eggs. That is why these wonderful foods of Nature form the constituents of "Ovaltine."

Malt extract is used, for powdered malt does not yield the same food value or exert the same digestive power. Pure, fresh milk from the finest pastures in England is used. 12,500,000 eggs are used each year, and these are obtained from our own farm and specially selected sources.

"Ovaltine" not only contains all the food elements but these are supplied in correct proportions and in a readily assimilable form. It is easily digested because it contains no starch or added sugar.

The regular use of delicious "Ovaltine" ensures a higher standard of mental and physical fitness than is obtainable from any other source.

"Ovaltine" is the most economical form of concentrated nourishment in the world for giving and maintaining health, strength and vitality.

Buy the larger size. It is the most economical.

WHEEL GRIP.

Appreciation Helps to Lessen Risks.

SOME CONSIDERA- TIONS.

Three separate and distinct causes of loss of adhesion between tyre and road are nearly always referred to by the use of one and the same word, viz. "skidding."
The writer believes that, failing for this reason to appreciate precisely what skidding is, not a few motorists drive in such a manner as to encourage the contretemps they seek to avoid on slippery roads.

Let it be said, therefore, that skidding, strictly speaking, implies that a wheel, or wheels, continues to move in its original direction but either locked by braking or rotating at a slower speed than is natural to its rate of progress over the road. For the sake of simplicity we can say that only a locked wheel skids.

Skids and Sideslips.

When a car skids sideways (usually the rear part only) it is not necessarily skidding; it is side-slipping, a form of loss of wheel adhesion that is encouraged to occur when the wheel skids.

A side-slip is also likely to occur, under some conditions, if the third form of loss of adhesion exists,
viz. wheel spin, which arises from the sudden engagement of the clutch with a low gear in use, on a slippery road, or from the sudden depression of the accelerator
when similar road conditions exist, especially, but not only, on a low gear.

Wheel slip is not a source of danger unless the road speed is fairly high; if it occurs when the car is being started from rest no harm or disconcerting circumstance will ensue, apart from the possibility, on a cambered road, of the driving wheels side-slipping towards the gutter.

A skid, however, contains greater possibilities of harm. It brings with it, for instance, greatly reduced braking effect, for a locked wheel skids along a slippery road more readily than a braked wheel rotating at its normal speed in relation to that of the car. Then, too, a skidding wheel is very prone to side-slip.

Applying those fundamental facts to practical driving, the following hints may be given:

Be Gentle.

Do not try to accelerate rapidly, or drive so that it may be necessary to use the brakes violently, on a slippery road, particularly on the side of a cambered road.

Engage the clutch as gently as possible when starting from rest where a side-slip might cause the car to hit something.

Try to avoid accelerating or braking forcibly on a slippery corner.

If the car commences to side-slip merely because a curve of the road is being taken too fast, or another vehicle being overtaken on a slippery cambered road, do not apply the brakes.

Do not even release the accelerator violently on a really slippery road at a corner or elsewhere, for this gives rise to an engine-braking effect that may cause the rear wheels first to skid and then to side-slip.

Keep four-wheel brakes, especially the units of the pairs, back and front, uniformly adjusted. If one back wheel is locked and skids, road adhesion is halved.

Do not avert the steering on a slippery road; anticipate the need for changes of direction whenever possible, in order to negotiate an obstruction in a long and gradual sweep.

Above all, drive slowly and cautiously where the road surface is or may be treacherous, and bear in mind, for one thing, that oil drippings at bus stopping places and elsewhere are a potential cause of skidding, wheelspin and side-
slip.

MOTORING ON THE RAILS.

Pneumatics Which May Revolutionise Rail
Travel on Continent.

The chassis was a normal six-cylinder 30 h.p. Hispano-Suiza; the driver was M. Marcel Michelin, one of the members of the great French tyre firm. I had been invited to take a seat by his side;
behind us were fourteen passengers on Pullman seats. We were motoring on rails, writes W. F.
Bradley to the "Autocar," speeding across country in the neighbourhood of Chartres at more than seventy miles an hour.

For the first few minutes it was rather disquieting to realise that the steering wheel was disconnected, to look down on the sleepers and the ballast, and to estimate the height we were from the ground. We have become so used to gripping a steering wheel and skimming over smooth, broad, surfaces that to run on rails without any steering gear was frightening.

But it is necessary to explain why we were motoring on the railroad track instead of on the highway. It is well known that a train only secures adherence by reason of its weight. Adopt the ratios of weight per horsepower current in motor car practice, and the engine would spin its wheels and remain stationary. To take one concrete example, a certain local French train with a capacity for 108 passengers has a dead weight of 120 tons. But the train is rarely filled to capacity; it is often only half filled; not infrequently the passengers number a dozen, or even half a dozen—no more than can be carried in a family touring car. Think of a passenger car weighing 120 tons! Under these conditions, is it surprising that the local lines are operated at a loss;
a loss so considerable that the French Government is contemplating additional taxes on motorists to meet the deficit.

Michelin's reply to this is:
equip the trains with pneumatic tyres and reduce the weights to the ratios common in motor car practice. After experiments extending over two years the scheme is an point, as was proved by the demonstrations
I was invited to attend on a little-used branch line between Chartres and Rambouillet.

Testing the Possibility with Aeroplane Fuselage.

To show the possibility of pneumatic-tyred trains, there had been built a duralumin aeroplane fuselage fitted with fourteen comfortable seats and having a lug-gare compartment both front and rear, on an ordinary Hispano-Suiza, short wheelbase chassis.
The steering gear had been disconnected, although the wheel remained in place; the axle had been widened to suit the track of the rails, but everything else was standard, including the gear box, rear axle, brakes, and even the shock absorbers. Near the rear of the fuselage there was another axle with a transverse spring.

The three axles were equipped with normal car type detachable disc wheels having a railroad flange bolted to them, and equipped with special pneumatic tyres, inflated to 85 lb. per square inch.
The tyres, which are "straight sides," mounted on the standard rim of 25x4in. are quite a special type of 33x4in. It is impossible to use a bigger section, for the width of the rail is only 23in., and the useful width less than 2in. Another difficulty was that in case of puncture the wheel must not drop more than 5/16in. In order to clear the bolts and other obstacles set within the rail. This result is obtained by mounting a wood ring inside the tyre. In order to demonstrate the effectiveness of this device a tyre was instantly deflated by the simple and effective method of breaking the valve stem while the car was running at 56 miles an hour.
There was a report and a puff of smoke, but nothing else happened.

The passengers stated that they felt no shock and no unusual movement of the car was visible externally. The wheel was afterwards changed in exactly the same way as on a car.

Increase of Comfort and Ease by Use of Tyres.

Comfort is undoubtedly increased by the use of tyres. These experiments were made on a local line completed just before the war, and carrying so little traffic that at one time it was proposed to convert it into a highway. At present only three trains a day run over it, and because of this light traffic no attempt has been made, during the last ten years, to keep the permanent way in good condition. Despite this, the Hispano-Suiza train was by far the most comfortable I have ever ridden in.

Immense possibilities of increased speed are opened up by this invention. The fastest train in France at the present time is one covering the distance of 96 miles from Paris to St. Quentin in 1 hour 32 minutes, or at practically 62 m.p.h. As I had opportunities of observing, while riding by the side of M. Michelin, the engine could very rapidly be revved up to a speed of 2,000 r.p.m., and we could hold it at 75, and even 80
m.p.h. This, it should be noted, was over one of the worst permanent ways in France. With a bigger and slower-running engine, carefully selected gear ratios, and an even better body than the aeroplane fuselage in which our passengers were carried, it is possible to foresee, in the immediate future, pneumatic-tyred trains running at 125 miles an hour. In other words, the train will be faster than the aeroplane on all but long trans-continental journeys.

Another interesting feature is the remarkable silence of the pneumatic-tyred train. Briefly, it is the silence of a high-class car running over a perfect road. On the road we should consider this result as quite normal; judged by railway standard it is quite exceptional.

These new trains have to adapt themselves to existing rails, but there is no reason why there should not be the same development towards balloon tyres as in car history. Permanent ways could be laid with much wider rails, allowing the use of wide-section tyres, giving still greater comfort and allowing of heavier loads.

Braking Ease Another Good Feature.

Another good feature is the ease of braking. With the normal servo-operated Hispano-Suiza four wheel brakes, and a direct hand-brake on the third axle, the train could be brought to a standstill from its maximum speed in about 100 yards. With the pattern of tyre employed, the front tyres tend to dry the rails by suction, leaving a clean, dry brake.

For the present, French railway companies are not interested in a train of the Hispano-Suiza type, and this model has only been built to reveal the possibilities.
Further, there is a national regulation which forbids any speed higher than 75 m.p.h.

The railway companies, however, are interested in faster and more economical haulage on the local lines, and because of this a 21-passenger car has been built, equipped with a 20 h.p. Panhard and Levassor sleeve-valve engine.
This has five axles, all shod with pneumatic tyres on detachable wheels, one of the axles being driven direct and the other by chain. The coach has a dead weight of 4½ tons, and carries a useful load of more than two tons.
The petrol consumption is rather less than that of a road vehicle carrying an equivalent load.
Maximum speed is 55 miles an hour, and an average speed of 50 miles can easily be maintained.
Because of the superior braking, it is quite possible to run these equipped petrol coaches on local lines without signals, and also to stop them not only at stations, but at any wayside places where passengers desire to be set down.

Whereas about thirty years ago
the pneumatic tyre revolutionised road travel, it will be interesting to see if it can also revolutionise rail traffic. The possibilities of this new application are undoubtedly immense.

"Why John—just look how easily and quickly we have left the traffic behind. We have a clear road ahead."

"Yes—the new Buick Straight 8-in-a-line is certainly the most thrilling car I ever owned—and I've paid thousands of dollars more for higher priced cars. It's just like Buick to build a car like this."

The reason for Buick's phenomenal performance is found in its new eight-in-a-line valve in head motor—its new and improved synchro-mesh transmission—and 36 other outstanding new features and advantages.

But with all this power and speed—Buick is immediately responsive to the slightest touch of its new steering mechanism and under the perfect and safe control of its big, powerful, smooth four-wheel internal expanding brakes.

GEORGE BUYS A CAR.

The Story of an Interesting Drive.

GEORGE descended upon me in the club. "I've bought a car," he said.

"Oh, that's very nice, George," I said. "You can take me out to golf on Saturdays now."

"Well, of course I can't drive very well yet," he said.

"No, of course," I said, "but if you want practice I'll come with you on Saturday."

"Sure you don't mind?" said George.

"Not a bit," I said. "I'm not nervous. Anyway we can take it easy so that if we do hit anything we won't be completely smashed up."

"No, that's true," said George, without enthusiasm.

"Where do you keep it?" I asked. "We have a garage beside the house," said George, "but it's rather small, and the pathway is a bit narrow, but we'll get used to it in time."

At two o'clock on Saturday I arrived at "The Acacia" and found George sitting up in an arm chair with the instruction book on his knees. At irregular intervals he stamped with his left foot, tweaking an imaginary accelerator with his right.

"It's no use," he said at last. "I can't change down."

"You needn't worry about that," I said, "as long as you can change up. Whenever you want to change down you simply stop and begin at the bottom again, and work your way up to the gear you want."

"I hadn't thought of that," said George, brightening up considerably. "Let's have a try. I expect I'll soon master all those double-somethings."

"That's the spirit, George," I said. "Forward to the fray."

"We have only two inches to spare at either side," remarked George as we arrived at the garage door, "so I have to climb over one of the rear wings and open the door at the driver's side. I can then insert myself through a nine-inch slit."

This he did in excellent time, which indicated that he had been putting in a spot of practice.

"I suppose I ought to flood the carburettor," said George. "All the best people do, but I can't get at it while the car is in the garage."

"You could flood it before you bring the car in," I suggested, but George pook-pooked the idea, assuring me that the petrol would surely evaporate before morning.

"What's that got to do with it?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't know," said George, "but all the people I know with cars flood the carburettor until petrol trickles on to the ground. After that the engine starts quite easily."

"Pour some on to the ground out of your spare can," I suggested, but George was crouching over the steering wheel, surveying the dials knowingly. Actually I expect he was wondering what to do next, for he wound up the clock to give him time to decide which pedal would start the works.

Making up his mind recklessly, he jabbed at something with his foot, and a quantity of machinery went into action with loud whirring and grindings. Apparently deciding that this was insufficient for a really good start, he grabbed at something else with his hand, and immediately a cloud of smoke issued from the exhaust pipe, indicating even to my uninitiated eye that things were indeed happening.

What did you do? I shrieked to George above the hum of the car.

"Oh, I forgot to switch on—very tricky remembering all the things at once; she ticks over well, doesn't she?" roared George.

"Yes," I bellowed. "What about bringing her out now?"

"All right," said George, wiggling his ears and peering into the gloomy depths below the dash. George wiggles his ears in moments of stress, so I wandered down the path to allow him to think out the problem in peace. After waiting a moment or two, as nothing whatsoever had happened, I strolled up the path again, and had almost reached the garage door when the car leapt backwards at me. I saved myself by sidestepping into the chrysanthemums; with the same alarming all-of-a-suddenness. The car stopped and George looked out with a slightly ruffled air.

"It's all a matter of practice, I can see," he informed me.

"Yes, I can see that," I said. "Do you think you've had sufficient to reach the roadway in safety?"

"I can find reverse easily now," he continued. "There's a little catch arrangement on the gear lever which has to be pulled up, then you push the lever as far away from you as you can towards the ash-tray, and there you are."

"Good," I replied. "Now, in negotiating the gateway, should you be pressed for room, I suggest you take the wooden support on the left in preference to the stone pillar on the right. It will be less destructive and more easily replaced."

"I'll manage it easily," said George, and to prove it he shot straight backwards into the middle of the road, making a perfect exit and completely blocking the road.

"I'm getting the hang of it now," he said when I overtook him. "It's much simpler than it looks."

"Very much, I'm sure," I said, for I had the impression that George had let go the wheel during the launch. I didn't dwell on the point as the traffic block was increasing at an alarming rate and George's attention was already fully occupied.

After screaming along for about half a mile on bottom gear I suggested that we might try another gear, as this one was bound to be getting a bit tired.

"Don't rush me," said George with a strained look. "I've got to get the feel of the car first."

"By all means," I said, "Just take your time."

He suddenly seized the gear lever, however, and kicked at one of the pedals. There was a terrifying noise, and the car executed a sort of mechanical hiccup. George sat back with a smile of content. "I've changed gear," he said.

"Is that what it was? I thought we had dropped the gearbox," I replied. "Anyway, let's hang on for a while before you do it again."

"We're doing twenty," said George, after another mile or so.

"Twenty what?" I asked. "Miles per hour, of course. The dial beside the clock says so," he replied.

"That's not miles per hour," I said, "that's pounds per square

BAD DRIVING.

"British Drivers Best."

By S. F. Edge.

I OFTEN wonder, when I see motorists starting off from rest as if they were competing in a mile race, whether they realise the extra wear and tear they are thus putting upon their engine and transmission, and the effectiveness with which they are shortening the life of their tyres. Drivers of this type are wont to start on first speed, after violently accelerating their engine, then get in their second and do the same thing, repeating the procedure through the whole range of available gears.

This causes wheel spin and unfair wear on the tyres; considerable clutch slip is often resorted to as well, causing heat and wear in the clutch, and the gears are damaged by being slammed through. Such atrocities upon the car are not confined to the process of starting; the type of driver I have in view generally pulls up in a fairly long slide on his tyres with still more serious wear and tear on them.

The Influence of the Stars.

Of course, the derivation of much of this sort of driving is sheer primitive desire to show off, but I think a little of it arises through watching the starts of races at Brooklands, for instance. It is noticeable after a race meeting, or a hill climb, how the ordinary motorist tends to copy the racing styles of the competitors, both in starting and stopping; it is admittedly spectacular, but it is most expensive, both for the tyres and the mechanism.

In the early days of motoring it was most interesting to watch foreign drivers arrive at an hotel entrance a la Jenatzy, who in the early part of this century was by far the fiercest driver in races. It was his sensational custom on arriving at every control in a race to lock his wheels and slide along, his tyres shrieking in agony at the outrage inflicted on them; this wicked style became the fashion with the typical Continental driver, and in this noisy and alarming manner he made a point of arriving at his hotel. When he resumed his journey he felt that all eyes were upon him, that it was incumbent, if he wished to maintain the high level of admiration as a driver that his arrival had earned, to start off with a violent rush, his back wheels spinning and leaving samples of rubber on the highway.

So it will be seen that there is nothing modern in the bad sort of driving I am drawing attention to; it is just a slavish repetition of what was done by those early motorists who strove to mimic the racing driver, only there is less excuse for it now.

Those of us who belonged to the other school, who nursed their cars, spared the mechanism unreasonable and uncalled-for shocks, and fondly called upon the tyres to perform such duties as they were designed for, gradually developed the quiet smooth running British car as opposed to the rough and boisterous demons of Inch—whatever that means.

"Oh," said George, rather resentfully, "I believe it has something to do with oil, it tells you how much pressure you have on the bearings."

"What bearings?" I asked.

"Oh, bearings, you know," said George vaguely. "things inside the engine—got to keep them cool or the engine will stop. Anyway, it doesn't matter. I'm going to try third gear."

He sat up tensely for a moment or so.

"Where's third?" he said. "Can you reach the instruction book? It's on the back seat."

Before I could reach it George pulled himself together, stamped vigorously, and gave the gear lever a powerful prod. There was another minor earthquake and the car shot forward. George was undoubtedly a trifle shaken, but remarked cheerily, "We're all set now."

Strangely enough we were, and we arrived home comparatively intact. There was the trifling loss of one wing and a quantity of paint, but there was the compensating acquisition of two fowls, part worn and bought at an inflated figure, and one cat, jettisoned, however, en route.

I phoned George the next day. "Well," I said, "are we playing golf to-day?"

"No, I'm afraid I can't," said George. "I'm teaching the wife to drive."—R. M. M.

power such as the German racing car Jenatzy used, with its big brakes, and coiled spring clutch that was either in or out and could not be slipped.

Cause and Effect.

It entertains me to speculate as to whether it was the nature and behaviour of those cars that evolved the type of driver, or was it that the driver of that day called for a car of the type he got? I am inclined to think that the latter was the real position, for there were brilliant Continental engineers then ready and able to give the crack driver what he believed he wanted.

Our experience in this country developed much more careful driving. For instance, our tyres were most delicate; at less than a fifty miles run at forty miles an hour they were inclined to fall, or even burst; they got so hot at that speed one could hardly handle them without gloves when repairs were started.

So merely on account of tenderness of the tyres the wise ones started quickly and smoothly, and when pulling up, came to a halt, as far as possible, without the brakes in action save for the last few yards.

To those who have not gone through the experiences it is probably difficult to realise adequately how the mechanical troubles of the early days forced designers to evolve gradually the luxurious and trouble-free motorcars of this present time. Why, the last little six-cylinder model that I had did 29,000 miles on its one set of tyres, and they were then good enough to sell it with. A big saloon I have has done 15,000 miles and the tyres look good enough to repeat the performance.

Economical High-speed Engines

It often makes me smile when people criticise the modern engine on the score that it runs too fast. It is precisely this ability to turn round fast that makes it possible for the light but sturdy small car of to-day to be put on the road in its thousands.

We did not have them in the earlier years, not because we did not want them, but because they could not be built; there was neither the requisite machinery, nor the highly developed metals. Truly the present high speed motor is a real marvel, the very possibility of it was scoffed at by leading engineers only a few years ago. However, we now have them, thanks to men like Sir William Morris, who took his courage in both hands and gave us the marvellous Morris at such low costs that it places that perfect road carriage of to-day within the easy reach of many many thousands who only a very short time ago rarely, if ever, travelled beyond their own immediate locality from one year's end to another.

State Senate of North Carolina is considering a bill which would impose a "luxury tax" on all sales of automobiles.

MOTOR SPIRIT FROM COAL

Experiments in Great Britain with the Hydrogenation Method.

The British motorist of to-day, purchasing his supplies either from the national facilities supplied by the large importing and distributing companies, or from the numerous other enterprises, may not be particularly interested in the fact that this country is seriously considering the possibility of the substitution—at some future date—of home supplies of motor spirit from home sources. Nevertheless, the subject is engaging—as it has engaged for some years past—the serious attention of those who can see immense possibilities in the utilisation of our coal resources with regard to the demand for liquid products, i.e., motor spirit and other petroleum requirements. It is well known that to-day this country is dependent upon imported motor spirit supplies to the extent of nearly ninety per cent. of its requirements, and the suggestion has often been put forward that it is imperative that something should be done to develop commercially these vast channels of scientific research which have told us that it is possible that, from our own supplies of coal alone, we can be practically independent of foreign supplies, writes Albert Lidgett, editor of the Petroleum Times. The suggestion is encouraging, though not entirely convincing.

It is said that our dependence in this matter is dangerous. Great Britain, however, next to the U.S.A., is the greatest consumer of petroleum fuels in the world, and for the time being at least this country must import practically the whole of its requirements. Those requirements are drawn from many different sources; its custom is almost as important to those who supply the oil as is Great Britain's need of the same, for the reason that the loss of that custom would be a severe economic blow. With a whole lot of countries anxious to sell us oil, the idea that this country might suddenly be deprived of supplies is far-fetched.

In the Event of a Naval Blockade.

It suggests that we should be at war with about half the world, and if Great Britain is ever effectively blockaded to the extent of not being able to get oil from abroad it must mean also that supplies of food from abroad would also be excluded, and that its people must be starved into surrender in a short time.

The other reason advanced for developing a home oil industry based on coal is that it would greatly relieve the distressed mining industry. It has been pointed out rather frequently by various experts that if all the oil consumed in this country were obtained by the hydrogenation of coal the quantity of coal required would only be of the order of a few million tons per year, and by no means so important as the annual fluctuations in the quantities of our coal exports. Consequently, the benefit to the British coal-mining industry could not be very substantial. On the other hand, if it were decided to obtain the oil required from the low-temperature carbonisation of coal the quantity of coal required for home consumption would certainly be increased, perhaps by twenty-five per cent. But there seems little reason to suppose that this comparatively low oil yielding method providing about twenty gallons of crude-oil material per ton would be selected in preference to direct hydrogenation, which method would yield several times the above quantity of crude oil per ton of coal.

Granted only a few special coals are readily suitable for use by the hydrogenation method, there would be no difficulty in obtaining these in sufficient quantities. In considering therefore whether it is worth while to make large sacrifices to establish a home oil industry on a very large scale the time element must not be ignored. With every encouragement, and by the most strenuous efforts, such an industry must naturally take many years to establish. Moreover, the capital requirements would be on a colossal scale, and it is difficult to see how these could be provided, except gradually over a very considerable period of years. Incidentally, the fact that Great Britain spends something like £10,000,000 annually to provide herself with oil fuels imported from overseas is an impressive one, but it is relatively insignificant when compared with the large sums expended for imported foodstuffs, much of which could also be produced in Great Britain if it were economically worth while.

Large Industry for Home Oil Production.

The whole question of whether we are to establish a large industry of home oil production from British coal or rely, as we have hitherto done, on imported motor fuels, boils itself down to the question as to whether it is worth while to make the necessary sacrifices to render the country independent of overseas oil, and, if so, whether the nation is prepared to pay the price.

Here let us look at a few facts as they appear to the motorist. With the excise tax of 8d. per gallon, the motorist is able to purchase the highest possible value spirit—that is, the best grade of the whole of the combine companies—for 1s. 4½d. per gallon is bulk at the pumps. Other brands are some pence per gallon lower, and many of these are really good motor fuel. Admittedly, the price is fictitiously low; that is why the Chancellor of the Exchequer has dropped another 2d. per gallon on the fuel. But the whole position as it exists at present is very temporary. The major portion of our spirit requirements comes from the United States, and there, not only are prices very low, but ocean transport facilities are on a scale the lowness of which has never before been experienced. Indeed, fleets of tankers are to-day laid up, the owners finding it is better to charter tankers for their purposes and pay the laying-up charges. Incidentally, the other day a tanker was chartered from Constantinople to U.K. at a price of 6s. 4d. per ton; normal prices would have been more than double. Such is the state of the ocean transport market. But there are other factors which to-day count.

The world knows that crude oil has been overproduced recently, and hence the price of refined products has been insufficient to pay operating costs. The consumer in the United Kingdom has benefited from this abnormal state. But American operators have learned the story of the evil of unnecessary production; the result is that output is declining and many fields are producing not one-half of what they were a few months ago.

As a result there is a rise—and a very substantial one—in crude oil prices, which must, of necessity, bring about an increase in refined oil prices. The ocean oil freight market is also showing signs of levelling itself. And we have the very recent departure from the Gold Standard, which makes motor spirit purchases from the United States dearer. And here comes the direct suggestion that motor spirit prices in this country must shortly advance; there is no other alternative. To-day motor spirit can be landed at Thames Haven storages for about 3d. per gallon; add to this the 8d. per gallon excise tax, and the commonsense reader can figure for himself about how long this state of things can last.

Cost of Production of Coal Petrol. But let us get back to the question of British oil from British coal. Within the past weeks hundreds of colliery owners have been privileged to witness the extraction processes carried out at a British colliery. The petrol produced is admittedly a first-class one, and by the use of catalysts, the particular variety of product can be varied at will. Perhaps the most interesting information imparted to the writer was that a high-grade petrol can be produced from coal at something like a cost of 7d. to 8d. per gallon, after providing for depreciation and overhead expenses. But this is a long cry from the present prices the motorist has to pay for his motor spirit, minus tax. Quite apart from the pronouncements of Imperial Chemical Industries, it is now generally recognised that the production of motor spirit from British coal is possible. Lord Rutherford recently confirmed this in the House of Lords, but he emphasised at the same time that, if the British people determine that their motor-spirit supplies must be furnished from British coal, they must be prepared to pay the price. This means, of course, that a home oil industry—suggestive of covering our major requirements in petrol—must be protected by a high tariff on imported oil products, making its price to consumers probably very considerably more than it is at present, and quite irrespective of the excise tax.

Members of the Institute of Fuel have recognised this fact ever since petroleum spirit has been cheap in this country. The talk of supplying all the oil requirements of the nation from the coalfields of the kingdom, once seriously advocated by men regarded as fuel experts, has been dropped, because even the most enthusiastic of such advocates has become impressed with the fact that it is hopeless to expect home-produced oil fuel to compete successfully with overseas petroleum oils imported into this country without restriction.

Even the differential of 8d. per gallon, due to the tax, between motor fuel from coal and that from foreign petroleum spirit is likely to prove far too small to permit a home oil industry to develop commercially so long as the basis prices of imported motor spirit remain reasonable. In these circumstances the British nation can only be supplied with home-produced oil if it is prepared to pay a substantially higher price than that at which it can purchase imported petrol. The development of a home oil industry depends upon how far the nation is willing to pay for the independence of its oil supplies from other countries.

Discussed by the British Association.

The chemistry section of the British Association discussed the subject at a recent date. At the meeting some very definite opinions were expressed by well-known scientists. Sir John Cadman has come to the conclusion that while oil for a long time to come would be largely produced in desert regions (the naturally referred to Persia, Iraq, etc.), the effort to make Britain self-supporting in the production of oil would, he believed, be to cut our own throats.

The director of the Imperial College of Science—Mr. H. T.izard—was no less definite in his conclusions, for he stated that the real question was not whether coal could be converted into oil, but whether it would be economic to do so. A comparison of figures led him to the conclusion that it was just barely possible to make oil by coal hydrogenation, but that it was very unlikely to be an economic advantage. Any other estimate he regarded with the greatest scepticism, and though by hydrogenation of coal this country could not only potentially but actually produce motor spirit at a price which experience had shown to be by no means prohibitive to the road transport industry, there was no possibility, so far as he could see, of producing it in competition with natural oil.

There is, however, another side to the question, and that is the one put forward by the enthusiasts of coal hydrogenation for the production of motor spirit in this country. This mass of opinion favours the encouragement of research, even to the extent of substantial State subsidies for the erection of commercial plants. This work might reasonably be expected to pave the

NEW HEAVY OIL MOTOR.

British Invention With Great Future.

WORK FOR THOUSANDS.

By a Motoring Correspondent. "In five years' time I expect to see private cars using heavy oil fuel in place of petrol," said M. Adolph Saurer, the well-known Swiss motor-car engineer, to me yesterday.

The occasion was a luncheon given by the Armstrong-Saurer Commercial Vehicles, Ltd., at which it was announced that this associated company of the Armstrong Whitworth group were making commercial motor transport vehicles equipped with heavy oil, using compression-ignition engines which were built at Scotswood, Newcastle-on-Tyne. No longer, stated the Chairman, Major-General G. P. Dawney, are Armstrong Whitworth makers of armaments. "To-day we are making ploughshares out of swords; and in road-transport vehicles of the character described we see a chance of enormous development to the benefit of British-built motors especially in countries such as South Africa."

Lieutenant-Colonel P. D. Ionides, Chairman of the manufacturing company and Vice-Chairman of the whole of the Armstrong group, said that by the launching of a well-trying heavy oil vehicle such as the Armstrong-Saurer, built at Newcastle-on-Tyne, it was hoped to give work to some thousands of people.

Safety From Fire.

"We are building a six-cylinder heavy oil engine," he added, "as the power unit of various types of chassis, because of its safety from fire risk and its low-running costs—about two-thirds that of a petrol engine."

Already there are 1,000 vehicles of the Saurer design running in England, and one user of these heavy oil motors has completed nearly 82,000 miles on one vehicle this year without a single day's rest for repairs or overhaul, in transporting fish from Grimsby. The new Armstrong-Saurer commercial chassis were to be seen at the Commercial Transport Motor Show, which opened at Olympia on November 5.

There was a four-wheel 4-ton chassis, a six-wheeler carrying 12 tons, and a four-wheeler four-ton high speed chassis for coaches and fast freight work.

Running normally from 1,600 to 2,000 revolutions a minute, this new heavy oil Armstrong-Saurer motor can speed up, it is stated, to 3,500 revolutions a minute, silently and with freedom from vibration or noise. The engine is fitted with electrically-heated plugs so that it can be started from cold within 20 seconds.—Ex.

THE RIGHT WAY.

Metal Tyre Cover Problems.

With metal tyre covers becoming more and more popular every day, it is high time that motorists learn the correct way to put them on and off the spare tyre. A very simple operation says "Service Sam" (Studebaker). On the other hand, if you go about it blindly, it is apt to prove rather a touchy job. Here is the easy way to put them on: Hook the front end over the tyre. Now the problem is to get the back end of the cover in place and that's where most people get into trouble. If you will observe carefully, however, you will find a small hook on the back side of the cover. By pulling on this hook, you spring the cover sufficiently to allow it to slip over the tyre easily. The hook should be clasped firmly and pulled with a quick jerk upward and outward in the line with which the hand hook is set.

Now, it is necessary only to give the cover a push with the hand and it is right in place. You will find that it is much easier to install the metal tyre cover if the wheel is dismounted. To remove the cover, simply reverse this process.

To avoid any possibility of marring the surface of the cover, it is a good plan to give it some protection from the clamp of the spare tyre mounting fixture. A piece of heavy adhesive tape for each clamp is supplied with these covers. This should be adhered to the under side of the clamps.

way for wholesale development, and at the same time it is reasonable to assume it might reveal many economies in the operation of the process.

But for many years to come it is obvious the British motorist will have practically no alternative to the consumption of motor spirit produced overseas, much as he might from a patriotic standpoint prefer to use the products of coal hydrogenation and to be independent of supplies from abroad.

Motoring's Most Thrilling Sensation--free wheeling

WHEN you drive a Studebaker Eight, you experience motoring's most thrilling sensation—Free Wheeling. You glide silently ahead two miles in every ten free of engine effort. You enjoy new economy, too, for Free Wheeling—pioneered and perfected by Studebaker—saves you 15% to 20% on petrol and oil. It is Free Wheeling in its finest form, yet in Studebaker's three great Eights you may own it at modest cost. Treat yourself to the luxury of a Free Wheeling ride. Come as our guest, today.

All new series Studebakers have Free Wheeling with one gear change lever—engineered as an integral part of the chassis.

CABINET AGREES TO DISAGREE.

TEN PER CENT. TARIFF.

STRIKING DEPARTURE.

London, Jan. 22. After further discussions lasting two and a half hours, the Cabinet to-night issued the following communiqué. The Cabinet has had before it the report of its Committee on the balance of trade and after a prolonged discussion, it has been found impossible to reach a unanimous conclusion on the Committee's recommendations. "The Cabinet, however, is deeply impressed with the paramount importance of maintaining national unity in the presence of the grave problems that now confront this country and the whole world. It has accordingly determined that some modification of the usual ministerial practice is required and decided that Ministers attending themselves should be supported by a majority of their colleagues on the subject of import duties, and cognate matters are to be at liberty to express their views by speech and vote.

Needs of The Time.

"The Cabinet being essentially united on all other matters of policy, believes that by this special provision it is best interpreting the will of the nation and the needs of the time."

Although the decision is not entirely without precedent, it marks a striking departure from usual practice and has created exceptional interest in political circles.

It is understood that the Cabinet Committee has been considering balance of trade questions, comprising representatives of all three political parties, namely, Mr. Walter Runciman, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, Sir John Simon, Sir Herbert Samuel, Lord Snowden and Sir Philip Cunliffe Liston.

Ten Per Cent. General Tariff.

The Times states that the proposal which found most favour in committee was one for the immediate imposition of a ten per cent. general tariff with limited exceptions, accompanied by a proposal for the creation of a committee empowered to make a more detailed examination of imports, and to schedule those which might be subjected to a higher rate of duty in later legislation.

The decision now reached, which will allow Ministers in disagreement with the majority on this issue freedom to express their views in Parliament, indicates the importance attached to maintaining unity in the face of the problems of overwhelming significance now before the world.

Minor Importance.

Satisfaction is expressed in ministerial circles that the constitution sufficiently pliable to permit of a development whereby co-operation on all main issues can be maintained while allowing this freedom in regard to a particular issue which, for the time being, is regarded as of less importance. British Wireless.

WUCHOW FIRE BRIGADE.

FIREBOAT PREPARED FOR EMERGENCIES.

Wuchow, Jan. 21. The officials in charge of the Wuchow Fire Brigade are making an effort to bring the department up-to-date, and to improve the efficiency of the Brigade. The members have been undergoing training which includes jumping from the high lookout tower, situated in the middle of the city.

In order that an outbreak of fire may immediately be discovered and aid promptly sent, a man is on duty at all times in the fire tower, which is of such a height that the whole city may be under observation.

A hand pump has also been placed on the Sham Kok Tsoi side of the Foo River, opposite the city proper.

The Fireboat which plies between Wuchow and Cheung Chau (a small island west of Wuchow), thus giving protection to both communities, has been ordered to keep up steam for the use of the pumps, and the firemen on the boat are required to blow the boat's whistle for a brief period several times during the day and night to show that the boat is full of steam and that the boat is prepared for an emergency.

In comparison with the old haphazard methods of fire-fighting in China, this attempt to improve the efficiency of the Brigade is a stride in the right direction, and the officials responsible for the advance steps deserve commendation. Our Own Correspondent.

KWANTI RACES.

PROMISING OUTLOOK FOR TO-MORROW.

(By "Ringtoll").

The Clerk of the Weather holds out every hope for a very successful sleighing meeting at Kwanti to-morrow, and there is sure to be a big gathering of cross-country fans, as some good class ponies will be in evidence in most of the events.

A fine selection of seven items will be served up for race-goers and, judging by the programme which I received during the week, the racing should be very interesting, with some excellent finishes assured.

The principal event is the Kempton Cup (first division) which should entice some good ponies to take the field. Lady Peel has a pony which is well thought of and promises to be a difficult candidate to beat. It is, I am told, in a very fit condition.

ARGENTINE TRADE POSSIBILITIES.

SPECIAL TREATMENT ADVOCATED.

London, Jan. 22. A deputation representing the principal financial and commercial interests directly connected with the Argentine was received to-day by Mr. Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade.

The deputation suggested that in view of the extensive British interests in the Argentine, special treatment should be accorded to encourage Anglo-Argentine trade, after provision had been made for Imperial requirements.

The Committee expressed the belief that a plan under which the Argentine might continue to find a market in Britain would ensure reciprocal advantages from the Argentine Government.—British Wireless.

EARLY MORNING CLASH WITH HYLAM REDS.

Singapore, Jan. 22. Two police constables on patrol duty, one armed with a rifle and ammunition, engaged 40 Hylams in the vicinity of the Admiralty Oil Tanks in the early hours of this morning.

Both the police constables were stabbed and one has little hope of recovery.

The Hylams escaped, taking the rifle and ammunition. They are believed to have been communists celebrating the Lenin anniversary. —Our Own Correspondent.

DASH ACROSS
SAHARA.

ESCAPE FROM ARABS.

Two intrepid newspaper men who left Colom-Bochar, in Morocco, to cross the Central Sahara to Gao, on the Niger, exploring one of the least-known and wildest areas of the world, have just reached Regan.

It was feared that the two explorers were lost, but a message has been received from them which says:

Our two armoured cars have covered the 500 miles which separated us from Regan in two and a half days. Seven bands of marauding Arabs were signalled to us, and we certainly just arrived in time.

The explorers are M. Leo, Gerville-Reache and M. J. Roger Mathieu, of the well-known Paris newspaper Le Matin.

They had reached by armoured car the dreaded Salt Desert, halfway between Regan and Timbuctoo, where slavery still exists and where the unfortunate Negro captives, who are compelled to extract the salt from the salt marshes, rarely live more than six months and usually die of thirst and fatigue after they have become totally blind from the effect of the blazing sunshine.

Both daring reporters are familiar with the immense stretches of No Man's Land of North Africa. M. Roger Mathieu accomplished the extraordinary newspaper feat of interviewing Abdul Krim, the Riff leader, in his mountain fastness at the height of the Riff rebellion against France, arriving at his headquarters sheltered by the rebel mountain gunners and bombed by his friends of the French Air Force in Morocco, who were unaware of the object of his enterprise.

M. Gerville-Reache is one of the few people who made the first world-tour with the airship Graf Zeppelin, and he also took part in the first trip of the world's greatest heavier-than-air machine, the German Do X.

Before leaving Taudeni, in the heart of the Salt Desert, the ex-

DO BARBERS TALK
TOO MUCH?

A REGISTRAR'S RUSE.

Are barbers too talkative? Mr. Registrar Friend thinks so. He said at Clerkenwell County Court: "It is my experience that barbers talk too much."

His ruse to stop the flow of talk, he explained, is to buy a newspaper and hold it in front of him while his hair is being trimmed.

Inquiries by a reporter suggested that barbers of to-day are much less talkative than their predecessors. "Never speak until you are spoken to," is apparently a general rule.

Following are some experiences gathered.
A Photographer: I have to do my newspaper reading before I sit in the barber's chair. Two days ago my barber was anxious to have my views on the Gold Standard.

An Artist: I have two barbers—one in Bond-street, the other in the Strand. The first is too busy attending to newly-arrived customers to give much attention to conversation. The other is a keen antiquary. I never tire of his stories.

A Novelist: My experience is that men's barbers are a gloomy lot in general.

Librarian: The man who last trimmed my hair could talk of nothing else but the Irish Sweep.

A London Editor: I always go to sleep at the barber's. If he did talk I shouldn't hear him.

A Machine Salesman: I do all the talking myself—the barber cannot get a word in edgeways.

A number of West End establishments prominently display the following notice in their saloons: "Our assistants are instructed not to force conversation on clients."

Explorers reported that they and their escort of camel-riders were caught between the two fires of bands of Arab nomads who were seeking to encircle the town. They had no other course, they stated, but to make at top speed for Regan in an attempt to escape.

ECONOMIES IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

NOTHING DRASTIC.

Headmasters in conference at Charterhouse, Godalming, discussed the problem of economies in public schools, and decided that the cost of education cannot be drastically reduced without grave loss of efficiency.

The conference agreed, however, that economies can, and should, be made by

A saving in administrative expenses.

Postponement where practicable of structural improvements, and Withdrawal of all demands for expenditure on purposes which are not of essential value to the efficiency of the school.

The conference was of opinion that the expectations of the parents of boys in boarding schools have greatly increased. In recent years, and suggested that every effort should be made to secure their co-operation.

Physical Training.

Another topic considered was the physical training given in public schools.

Mr. M. L. Jacks, of Mill Hill, who advocated that the army instructor type of physical instruction should be replaced by a system of physical education directed by a graduate, said:

"The bulk of Army instructors are limited in their outlook, however efficient they may be. Their work is apt to be unrelated to the boy's other subjects and especially to his games."

"Some of the exercises I believe to be definitely harmful. I am told that the horizontal bars are one of the prime cause of round shoulders. The gymnastic apparatus caters only for the expert, who are a small proportion of the boys."

The conference passed a resolution recognising the value and diversity of the work already done in the schools, emphasising the importance of a carefully considered system of physical education, and welcoming the formation of the Carnegie Institute for Physical Training.

YAUMATI FIRE
INQUIRY.SCOUTMASTER'S BRAVERY COMMENDED.

Tribute to the bravery of a scoutmaster was paid at the inquiry yesterday into the tragic fire at No. 188 Shanghai Street, Yau-mat, on the evening of January 9 when four lives were lost. The inquiry was held at the Kowloon Magistracy yesterday afternoon, with Mr. Fraser, sitting as Coroner. The victims of the blaze were a woman Kwong Ting-shu (38), Kwong Tin (10), Kwong Ngau-chau (4), and a female infant aged ten days.

The jury empanelled consisted of Messrs. S. Bruggen Bate (Foreman), V. Ribeiro and Fung Chik-man. Station-Officer Smith gave evidence of receiving a call to a fire at 188 Shanghai Street at about 8.30 p.m. on Saturday, January 9. On the arrival of the Brigade, the fire had already obtained a firm hold on the premises. The stair-cases of the burning building were made of wood and they had caught alight, thus cutting off the only means of escape. With improvised ladders and from adjoining houses, the Brigade was able to rescue many people who were trapped in the premises.

Accident With Cigarette. Lai Mui, living on the ground floor of No. 188, which was a cotton quilt shop, stated that she was working on the cotton that evening. In lighting a cigarette, she accidentally set fire to the cotton, which burned up so quickly that before she and the other inmates of the shop could put it out, the stairs had caught fire. The outbreak spread very quickly and very soon the whole house was involved.

Evidence of identification of the bodies was given by Kwong Chun, the husband and father of the four dead people, who said he was not at home at the time of the fire. He stated he was taken to the Kowloon Mortuary where he saw the bodies of his wife and three children.

At the conclusion of his evidence, the Coroner said, "I want to tell you how sorry we all are for you in this tragic affair." Dr. Utter testified that at about 10 a.m. on January 10, the bodies of the four dead persons were identified by the previous witness as his wife and three children respectively. All the four had been very badly burned and in his opinion, death was caused by suffocation.

Tribute to Scoutmaster. At this point, the Coroner said he did not think further evidence was necessary. He would like, however, to mention the gallant conduct of Mr. Lau Hung-chol, whose work in the fire had been fully reported to him. Mr. Lau, whom he understood was a local Scoutmaster, was very early at the scene of the fire, and had gone up to the burning building where he removed all the combustible material he could find and was instrumental in saving the lives of several people. Mr. Lau tried to get to the four dead people, but eventually found that he could not reach them, and had to leave to the Fire Brigade to extricate the dead bodies.

Addressing Mr. Lau, the Coroner said, "Mr. Lau, I do not propose to call your evidence, but I should like to mention your conduct in connexion with this fire. You have done a great deal not only in preventing the fire from spreading but also in saving the lives of several people. I take great pleasure in commending you."

Accidental Death. In his summing-up, the Coroner said there was no doubt as to the origin of the fire. The woman living in the ground floor had been smoking and had thrown a match into the cotton which was stocked in the shop. She should not have been smoking at the time, but she could not be held responsible for the deaths of the four people. There was no doubt that death, in all cases, was due to suffocation as a result of the fire. The verdict of manslaughter, he continued, could not enter into the inquiry because there was no direct contact between the woman who caused the fire and the deaths of the people.

The jury, after consideration returned a verdict of "Accidental Death." The Coroner concurred with the verdict.

MORE WARSHIPS BEING SENT.

THREAT TO PRESS.

Tokyo, Jan. 22.
 A number of warships have been despatched to Shanghai and several others have been ordered to be ready to leave at a moment's notice owing to growing uneasiness over the situation.
 The aircraft-carrier Notoro is leaving Port Arthur. The cruiser OI, with a landing party of blue-jackets, four destroyers and one other aircraft-carrier left Kure last night.
 An additional cruiser and twelve destroyers at Sasebo have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to proceed.
 Measures for the protection of Japanese residents at Shanghai were discussed at to-day's meeting of the Cabinet, which decided to leave the whole matter to the discretion of the Navy Minister.
 Reuter.

Naval Men v. Newspaper.

Shanghai, Jan. 22.
 The sensational development of Japanese policy this afternoon is leading to intense speculation regarding the "suitable measure" the Japanese are proposing to take against the Chinese within the International Settlement.

Five Japanese naval men called on the offices of the Chinese paper Min Kun Jih Pao, situated at Shantung Road, in the centre of the Settlement, and prominently demanded an apology for a statement published that the Japanese Marines had assisted the Japanese mob in the recent attempt to destroy a Chinese factory. The editor was ordered to visit the Japanese Marine garrison with a written apology, to publish a full page apology in the paper, punish the staff member responsible for writing the report and give assurances that there would be no repetition of the offence.

The editor pointed out that other Chinese papers had published a similar report, and a Japanese lieutenant replied that no argument would be allowed, and if satisfaction were not forthcoming before five o'clock to-morrow morning, the Japanese would take suitable measures.
 The editor has appealed to the police for protection, and extra

SOMME MEMORIAL.
 MONCE OF WALES AT THIEPVAL.
 London, Jan. 22.
 The Prince of Wales will, on Monday week, unveil a memorial to the missing at Thiepval, on the Somme.
 The French President, M. Doumer, will attend the ceremony.
 An imposing arch 140 feet in height and 135 feet in breadth has been erected on the ridge overlooking the Somme river. On it will be an inscription denoting the total number of British and French lives sacrificed during the war, and the names of 73,877 men of the British Empire who fell on the Somme.—British Wireless.

CHINA CUSTOMS REVENUE.

BIG ADVANCE AT MOST STATIONS

Shanghai, Jan. 22.
The Maritime Customs revenue for last year, consisting of import duties, export and inter-port duties and tonnage dues, totalled 246,061,000 Haikuan taels, compared with 180,570,000 in 1930.

Increases were registered as follows:

| |
|----------------------|
| Harbin: 1,193,000 |
| Dairen: 112,000 |
| Newchwang: 236,000 |
| Tientsin: 10,115,000 |
| Kiaochow: 2,258,000 |
| Hankow: 2,063,000 |
| Shanghai: 27,892,000 |
| Amoy: 767,000 |
| Swatow: 186,000 |
| Canton: 1,382,000 |
| Kowloon: 4,078,000 |

The only decrease was Antung: 452,000.

The native customs collections until May 31, the date when these establishments were closed by the Government, amounted to 2,250,000 Haikuan taels.

Flood relief surtax, enforced on December 1, amounted to 1,925,000 taels.

All foreign loan and indemnity obligations secured on the Customs revenue, including the service of the Reorganization Loan of 1913, were met in full. They cost 119,813,009 Shanghai taels, or 28,338,660 more than in 1930.

The service (both interest and redemption) of all domestic loans and Treasury notes secured on the cancelled indemnities and on additional duty, have been met or provided for in full.—Reuter.

GEMS OF PERIL.

"Don't worry. He'll come around all right! Everything will come out fine, see if it doesn't!" She kissed him lightly on the cheek and was relieved to see his eyes twinkle at her mischievousness.

"He certainly slammed you around proper, didn't he, miss?" he teased.

There was an unaccustomed flush in the grey eyes. "I'll make him eat those words some day."

"But look here," he turned serious suddenly, "you oughtn't to take a chance wearing that necklace up there, Mary! It worries me."

"Just let him see it!" Mary pleaded. "Then I'll take it off."

"Bates or you can take it away and lock it up again, if you like. He thinks I've got it out of the safe, but he isn't sure. If he shows up to-night at all, this will make him try for it now. I don't want to wait any longer, either—I want to know quickly. And then as soon as the police take him, I want to get back to New York."

"That so?" Jupiter seemed surprised. "Now I kinda counted on your going on a little fishing trip soon as this is over—kinda made up my mind I'd like to try for some taracuda down around Dry Tortugas."

Mary said tremulously, "I'm afraid I've lost my fish and I must go back and get him!" Suddenly she was crying, to her intense mortification.

"Hi!" Jupiter scoffed, patting her shoulder. "He'll come running the minute he sees you. Don't you worry."

"Say!" Henry Bates demanded, gravely. "When do we eat?"

"They all went out to the elevator together. There was the sound of a telephone ringing, and after listening a minute they decided that it came from Mary's room."

Bates frowned at the delay and rolled impatient eyes to the ceiling to indicate the state of his appetite.

At first the voice over the wire appeared to be no one Mary recognized. She was about to hang up, thinking someone had called the room by mistake. It was a girl's voice, and she appeared to be pleasantly excited about something.

"It's the mail clerk, Miss Harkness!"

"Oh," Mary said, "of course. Stupid of me. You've a letter for me, is that it?"

"Not a letter, Miss Harkness, but I wanted to tell you—you've been so anxious for a letter from Mr."

CHANG REFUSES OPINION.

Nanking, Jan. 22.
It transpired that no conference was held at the Memorial park this morning, owing to the non-arrival of Chiang Kai-shek, who was due to attend.

Chiang arrived at Nanking from Tongshan at 3 p.m. and proceeded to the headquarters of the officers of the Moral Endeavour Association, where he awaited the return of Wang Ching-wei, who had gone to see Mr. T. V. Soong.

All the afternoon important personages arrived at the Association for an important conference, which it is expected will be held some time this evening.

Chiang Kai-shek has refused to express any opinions on the political situation.—Reuter.

Rayther—that he's here, now."

"Here in Miami. At the Blackstone, I think. But just look at to-night's paper, under 'New Arrivals,' and you'll see it. I have to read it every day, you know, to know who's stopping at the other hotels, in case the wrong letters came here, you see."

"Thank you! Thank you!" "I thought you'd want to know!"

In a perfect daze of happiness, Mary hung up the receiver. Dirk was here! Dirk had come! He hadn't written, he had come himself!

Mind of Man.

The fury of Nature lashed up in two towers of power of savage man, lurking beast, hungry reptile and evil of the jungle, or of swamp!

A volcano in full eruption, lava waves lay in a horrible hot and a volcano, hand to hand, a fight to the death, unarmed men and raven on the peaks, a fight to the death, the bloody yawning of a volcano, things you never even dream of taking place right before your eyes in the picture that packs a thrill in every scene during scenes.

Laval Also Slamming Doors.

FRENCH FOREIGN POLICY.

Paris, Jan. 22.
"The French Government will not allow any of the treaties decreed by its predecessors to be proscribed, declared M. Laval, obviously referring to the agitation against the Treaty of Versailles, in the course of his statement of foreign policy to a packed Chamber this afternoon.

M. Laval, who is Foreign Minister as well as Premier, said that France would only accept reductions in reparations as reductions were granted her on war debts.

The provisions of the Young Plan, he went on, could not be modified. All that could be done was to alleviate the charges by a moratorium.

France had made many gestures of goodwill to facilitate European Union, but would not accept that the will of Germany should alone dictate the solution.

France-British Agreement?

The same rules of honesty as applied to the relations of men applied to international relations (general cheers) and he thought that an agreement between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and himself in regard to the future Reparations Conference was only a question of time.

M. Laval went on to say that the disarmament policy of France was in conformity with the League of Nations Covenant, but she was not prepared to accept any improvisations that might compromise her security.

Set an Example.

France in the last ten years had set an example in the reduction of armaments, but she would go further and would submit positive proposals for the realization of political conditions of immediate mutual assistance.

The technical procedure of a reduction of armaments would then be easy to work out. He concluded by appealing for a party true and received a tremendous ovation.

The Chamber then expressed its confidence in the Government by rejecting an opposition motion moved by M. Herriot by 503 votes to 265.

Subsequently a direct vote of confidence in the Government was carried by 312 votes to 261.

LORD READING'S ILLNESS.

NOW REGARDED ANXIOUSLY.

Luxor, Jan. 22.
There is now little doubt that Lord Reading is very ill.

A doctor and a nurse arrived at Luxor by air from Cairo at three o'clock this afternoon. The doctor very soon afterwards diagnosed the illness as influenza and bronchitis.

It is believed that in all likelihood it will prove a lengthy case. The Anglo-American Hospital in Cairo is despatching a special messenger to Luxor to-night with medical supplies.

Later.
It was announced this evening that Lord Reading's condition was slightly worse. He is now suffering from acute bronchitis and slight congestion of the lungs.

DOLLAR RISES A FARTHING.

REFLECTS SILVER ADVANCE.

With silver up both in London and New York, the Hongkong dollar has appreciated a farthing to day, the rate being 1s. 5 1/16d. on demand.

In London, the advance was 3/8ths spot and 5/16ths forward, due to the Continent buying. There were small offerings. After the official fixing, the market ruled idle, with buyers satisfied.

New York reports an advance of a quarter, with the market steady. The cross-rate is down to 3.45.

Shanghai is quite steady, due to the Japanese developments, at 1s. 10 7/8d.

Locally, the market is steady, the outside rate being about 1s. 5 1/4d., but there is little business doing.

EARLY MORNING BLAZE.

WELLINGTON STREET OUTBREAK.

INMATES ESCAPE.

To the long list of fires which have occurred in the Colony during the past couple of months is to be added yet another disastrous outbreak. Fortunately, in the present instance, there were no casualties, the inmates either escaping or being rescued by the Fire Brigade which was immediately on the scene.

The outbreak occurred in Wellington Street, just off Pottinger Street, in house No. 63, which was occupied by a joss-paper merchant, with the two upper floors used as tenements.

Futile Attempts.

On the ground floor, where the manager of the Fuk Wah and his family were sleeping, the fire broke out at 2.45 this morning. The floor was alight for some little time before the inmates became aware of the danger. They instantly attempted to extinguish the flames by means of blankets, but without success. The alarm was raised and a message sent to the police and the Fire Brigade.

Being within a stone's throw of the Central Police Station, police officers were quickly on the scene and were immediately followed by the appliances from the Central and other fire stations. Jets were directed from the buildings opposite and from the streets.

House Destroyed.

In about half an hour's time the flames were subdued, the fighters effectively preventing the fire from spreading to the adjoining buildings. The house involved was completely burnt out but the two houses next door were but little damaged.

A large quantity of joss paper was stored on the ground floor in readiness for the Chinese New Year and once alight this highly inflammable material soon made the building a blazing furnace.

The alarm was raised before the outbreak had assumed serious dimensions and a number of the inmates were able to make good their escape through the trap doors on to the roof before the arrival of the brigade.

Rescued by Firemen.

A few occupants of the upper floors were rescued by the firemen whose arrival on the scene almost immediately the alarm was given prevented any casualties.

It is understood that the goods on the ground floor were worth about $5,000 and were insured for $2,000.
